Rooted in Northern California's Lake County and complemented by a second tasting room in Rancho Mirage to the south, Tulip Hill Winery frames the Golden State with its vibrant fruits of the vine. An artist of the soil for over a half-century, Tulip Hill founder Budge Brown cultivated an appreciation for the process of winemaking in daughter Kristi and together they unveiled their first vintage in 2001.

Two versatile vineyards provide the creative palette. Standing as a natural barrier to inclement weather, Mount Oso serves as sanctuary to the more than 380 acres of Cabernet Sauvignon, Chardonnay, Merlot, Syrah, Zinfandel, and increasingly popular varietals from Southern Europe that grace the alluvial fan of the mountain. The 18-acre Pope Valley vineyard—aligned with the path of the sun for optimal climate control along the northeast slope of Howell Mountain—nurtures Cabernet Sauvignon and Petite Syrah. More than 6,000 tulip bulbs of hundreds of varieties are planted at Pope Valley as well.

Close to the source and ensconced by the fertile folds of Mendocino, Sonoma, and Napa, the winery and tasting room in Nice, California, are redolent, not only with the brilliant bouquet of Tulip Hill's wines, but also with its namesake flower that carpets the extensive gardens (an additional 48,000 bulbs are planted each year around the winery's grounds). "The tulip, historically, is one of the world's most highly prized flowers," says Kristi Brown, president and co-owner of the family-run enterprise. "My father chose the tulip as a symbol of the quality.
